

Visiting Bordeaux in 1787, Thomas Jefferson, then serving as the first ambassador to France from the United States, found time, among other, presumably more pressing engagements, to advise President George Washington on his wine cellar. He reported back on the leading producers in the region: 'Gernon, Barton, Johnston, Foster, Skinner, Copinger, and McCarthy.' The presence of Irish names at the centre of Bordeaux winemaking – an activity at which France most notably excels – might surprise, as the mass emigration of the Irish to America in the nineteenth century is well known. Yet, even earlier, political pressures and religious persecution had driven thousands of Irish men and women to seek a new life in continental Europe.

From the Flight of the Earls at the beginning of the seventeenth century to the mass exodus following the Crown's dishonouring of the Treaty of Limerick in 1691, Irish men and women, mostly but not exclusively Catholic, set off from Ireland's shores, forced into uncertain exile. Collectively, these waves of Ireland's finest are known as the 'Wild Geese,' and while Ireland lost generations of leaders, the exiles went on to make an enormous contribution to European culture. The numbers are remarkable, given the dangers of the journey made in small boats and the vast distances covered. As William Butler Yeats put it, 'the wild geese spread / the grey wing upon every tide.'

Many émigrés achieved fame and distinction fighting in the armies of France and Spain, others as scholars in Irish colleges from Rome to Prague to Seville. Still others entered the wine trade in Bordeaux and established great châteaux, many of which still bear their names. In addition to those mentioned by Jefferson, the families of Lynch, Dillon, Burke, Roche, and Walsh were also influential. The move into winemaking was natural for these exiles, as they had already developed strong connections with the wineries of France. In the early eighteenth century, Dublin imported more casks from Bordeaux than the whole of England and Scotland combined. The English peer Lord Chesterfield commented sourly: 'One gentleman in ten in Ireland is impoverished by the great quantity of claret which, for mistaken notions of hospitality and dignity, they think it necessary should be drunk in their houses.' Even worse, he continued, 'drinking wine has become an affectation among the middle and lower classes.'

The Wild Geese winemakers of Bordeaux were among the most innovative pioneers of viticulture in the eighteenth century. In honour of their Irish contribution to France, wines from 10 vineyards established by these exiles – known, inevitably, as the 'Wine Geese' – have been carefully selected for the cellar at Ballyfin.

Champagne

Uniquely situated in the most northerly wine region of France, the vineyards of Champagne are planted on gentle rolling slopes with hundreds of different angles to the sun and rooted in very deep layers of calcareous alkaline soils. For centuries Pinot Noir and Chardonnay have proven to be the two most suitable noble grape varieties in such a cool climate. Above all Champagne is the produce of an “Assemblage” i.e. a regular blend of many different sources of older vintages, vineyards and grapes within the region. This imparts a unique “House” style and quality especially in non-vintage wines.

White Wines

France

Northern Rhône

Great white wines are produced in the Northern Rhône. Made only with the Viognier grape a noble grape variety, the wines from Condrieu exhibit full bodied, luscious and creamy fruitiness. Usually unoaked to preserve their peachy and apricot aromatic signature. Marsanne and Roussanne are the staple grapes used to make the wines of Crozes –Hermitage and Saint-Joseph.

Southern Rhône

Only produced in small quantities, all white Rhône wines are fairly low in acidity and have a great fruity character and personality and as with the Northern Rhône the majority are unoaked. The Appellations d'origine of the Southern Rhône offers a larger palette of grapes than in the North. From Grenache Blanc to Clairette, Marsanne, Roussanne, Bourboulenc etc. Most are excellent partners to seafood and cheeses.

Languedoc Roussillon

Mainly a red wine producing region in the South of France manages to offer a range of delicate modern style of white wines made with grapes similar to those from the Rhône Valley. Some indigenous white grapes like the Picpoul de Pinet produce a very delicate fine white wine that accompanies most seafood very well or that can be enjoyed on its own before a meal

Burgundy

Chardonnay is the ubiquitous, unchallenged top white grape variety grown in Burgundy. The secret of Burgundy's fame rests behind a myriad of "terroirs" allowing for a unique kaleidoscope of flavours and textures that springs from the subtle combinations of various soil types, relations to the sun, altitudes and latitudes. On the one hand, with its cool climate, Chablis exhibits a very mineral, crisp fruity character and on the other, the ultra-elegant and complex Grand Cru wines that can age for decades. Middle Burgundy to the Southeast with slopes facing East and where vineyard elevation is key to quality, includes all the good village names like Meursault, Chassagne, Puligny etc. The southern part of Burgundy is influenced by warmer climates with elegant styles such as Saint Veran, Saint-Aubin and further South, Pouilly-Fuisse which are good value wines with riper and sometimes more rustic and exotic flavours. Many white Burgundies are aged in oak barrels.

Bordeaux

Bordeaux produces a small percentage of whites based on the Sauvignon Blanc and Semillon grapes. The top Crus Classes wines are often aged in new oak barrels and are on par with the best of the Burgundies. But the trend is not to use wood for the less expensive Sauvignon based wines in order to retain their aromatic character.

Alsace

Alsace's continental climate helps to produce excellent white wines. Very cold winters, followed by very warm summers and compensated by 200-300m slope elevations helps create a perfect climate for the Riesling, Gewürztraminer and Pinot Blanc. Unoaked and pure varietal wines reflect the Alsace way of making wines, except for the brand "Edelzwicker" which is a blend of various grapes and mostly consumed locally.

Loire Valley

The Loire valley has thousands of hectares planted with Sauvignon Blanc, its staple variety and best export. Terroir is key for fruit character and textural expression. Pouilly-Fume is usually smoother, elegant, and more supple, with the expression of Sauvignon a touch lighter. The wines of Sancerre often tend to be more vibrant, lively, crisp and fruity. But sometimes the difference can be difficult to distinguish especially in lesser quality vineyards.

As the wine industry grew, different regions of South Africa began to develop their own distinct wine styles. The Western Cape, which includes the Cape Town area, is the largest and most well-known wine region in the country. It is known for its production of crisp, fresh whites made from Sauvignon Blanc and Chenin Blanc, as well as bold, full-bodied reds made from Syrah and Pinotage, amongst others.

Central to the success of New Zealand wine is the temperate maritime climate, and the highly distinctive nature of the wine styles. Sauvignon Blanc was the first wine to put New Zealand on the map, and it developed a cult following with millions around the globe. During the 1990s, plantings of this internationally fashionable variety exceeded those of every other grape, today top-quality Chardonnay can be found in every region.

Red Wines

France

Northern Rhône

The red wines of the Northern Rhône are made with one unique grape, the Syrah. However, unlike other French red wines, Crozes-Hermitage and Hermitage can add up to 15% of white grapes (Marsanne and Roussanne) but this option is seldom applied. The region's reds are easy to identify with sweet scents of black olives and liquorice mingling with hints of vanilla, especially when the wines are still youthful and aged in new oak.

Southern Rhône

Although there is a plethora of local grapes grown in the Southern Rhône (13 grape varieties are allowed in Châteauneuf du Pape), the Grenache, Syrah and Mourvèdre grapes dominate the viticultural landscape. The resulting taste profile for these wines is always vibrant, warm, fruity, spicy and fantastic with autumnal and wintery rich cuisine.

South- West

Still fairly undiscovered as a wine region, the area offers excellent value, and it is home to a diverse array of interesting wines and appellations. Madiran is an appellation that produce wines that are rich, concentrated and abundant tannins made with Tannat grape. In the Cahors appellation grow mainly Malbec with small quantities of Tannat and Merlot grape. Wines produced in here are darkly coloured and have a meaty, herb-tinged aroma, with hints of spiced black cherries and a whiff of cedar.

Loire

Thanks to its cool climate, the Loire Valley exhibits mainly white wines. However, its reds are wonderful wines in their own right and well worth trying. The more continental Southeastern part of the region uses the early ripened Pinot Noir. Sancerre producers vinify about 25% from this grape variety as Sancerre rosé and 10% as Sancerre red. Most of the production is for dry, sparkling and sweet whites in a descending order of volume.

Beaujolais

To the South lies the Beaujolais region, administratively part of Burgundy, but less so viticulturally. Here the Pinot Noir grape gives way to the Gamay grape, which flourishes well in granitic soils and gives light, fragrant very silky smooth and delicate fruity wine.

Situated on the left bank of the Gironde estuary, Margaux and Saint-Julien wines tend to be quite aromatic, bouncy and voluptuous. There tends to be more concentration, depth and structure in Saint-Julien and more intrinsic delicacy in Margaux due to a warmer, lighter soil composition. The vineyards of Pauillac produce dense, rich and fruity wines with thick, ripe and attractive chewy tannins but, in general, have a less elegant feel and texture than in Margaux and Saint-Julien. Saint-Estèphe vineyards are planted in colder soils with more clays and produce very coloured wines with a thick texture, seemingly austere in their early years but unfolding into beautiful wines with time.

Mendoza

In the centre west of the territory, at the foot of the Andes Mountain range, Mendoza holds 75% of the total vineyards in Argentina and the largest number of wineries in the country. This makes it the most important wine province and one of the main producing centres in the world.

The highest peaks of the Andes are found in Mendoza: with 22.832 ft, Aconcagua is the highest peak in America. The presence of the Andes, which act as a barrier to the humid winds of the Pacific, added to the distance to the Atlantic Ocean, shape the climate generating ideal conditions for the cultivation of vines. The altitude, continental climate, heterogeneity of soils and the snowmelt are key factors for the production of excellent wines, which add to a significant winemaking tradition.

Israel

Israeli wine is produced by hundreds of wineries, ranging in size from small boutique enterprises to large companies producing over ten million bottles per year. Wine has been produced in the Land of Israel since biblical times. Wine was exported to Rome during the Roman period, but under the Muslim rulers the production was virtually wiped out. The modern Israeli wine industry was founded by Baron Edmond James de Rothschild, owner of the Bordeaux estate Château Lafite-Rothschild. Today, Israeli winemaking takes place in five vine-growing regions:

Dessert & Fortified Wine

Sweet wines come in very different styles. The Botrytised wines from Sauternes and Monbazillac are made with the Semillon and Sauvignon grapes of late autumnal harvest. They exhibit a unique aromatic expression and flavour of a typical “Rôti” (roasted citrus fruits) when grapes are selected and harvested by hand in October, November and sometimes as late as December amongst the top Châteaux.
